

The 50501 Principles of Purpose and Integrity

Preamble

We, the members of 50501, come together not as followers of a trend or servants to a party, but as people who have been broken, pushed, ignored, and still—still—we rise. We are survivors. Fighters. Dreamers. We are those who were told to sit down and stay silent, and instead we chose to speak, to move, to build. Not out of anger alone, but out of love. Love for each other. Love for justice. Love for what this world could be if we refuse to give up on it.

These ten principles are not poetry. They are not slogans. They are the bones of this movement. The soul of what we stand for. They were shaped by pain and forged by purpose—built on the knowledge that real change comes when we choose truth over comfort, courage over convenience, and community over ego. They are how we hold each other accountable. They are how we say: we will not become what we're fighting against. This is our promise. To ourselves. To each other. To the world we're building—one act of integrity, one voice of resistance, one collective heartbeat at a time.

Our Ten Foundational Commitments

Real, lasting change cannot come from violence. Not in our communities, not in our organizing, not in ourselves. We believe that choosing peace—even in the face of rage, grief, and injustice—is not weakness. It's strength. It's discipline. It's clarity of purpose.

Our commitment to non-violence isn't just strategic—it's moral. It's about honoring the dignity of those we fight for and refusing to become what we're standing against. Violence corrupts movements. It silences voices. It breeds fear. We are here to do the opposite: to create a movement that listens louder, protects harder, and speaks truth without harm.

There are lines we will not cross. Not in the streets. Not online. Not in private. Not in public. We will not use violence, threaten it, excuse it, or stand silently beside it. This is not up for debate. This is not a gray area. If you believe violence is acceptable to advance this cause, this is not the place for you.

We are building something better. Not perfect. But better. And that requires discipline, not chaos. Courage, not cruelty. Love, not hate.

To commit to this movement is to commit to peace, even when it's hard. Especially when it's hard. That is our strength. That is our choice. Always.

Commitment to Non-Violence

The power of peace—not as passivity, but as resistance grounded in dignity. Non-violence is not just a strategy we adopt for optics or legality. It is the core of who we are and what we refuse to become.

In a world that normalizes cruelty and rewards domination, we choose another path. We reject violence in all its forms—not just physical, but verbal, psychological, digital, institutional. We will not raise fists or spread fear to make our voices heard. We don't need to. Our truth is loud enough.

This is not softness. It is strength. The kind that says: I will not become what hurt me. The kind that holds the line with courage instead of harm. The kind that builds, protects, and heals even when the world says break, destroy, or give up.

We hold a zero-tolerance stance toward violence—whether in speech, action, threat, or intention. To fight for justice while wielding harm is to betray the very people we claim to stand beside. There is no gray zone here. No exceptions.

To be part of this movement is to carry a deep, unwavering commitment to peace. Not just when it's easy or convenient, but when it's hardest. Especially then. Because that's when it matters most.

We believe in fierce love. And fierce love doesn't destroy—it defends. It shows up. It protects. It resists through truth, through unity, through action—and never through violence. That is our promise. That is our line in the sand.

Respect for Individual Freedom

Freedom is not a privilege—it is a birthright. Every human being deserves the ability to live on their own terms, to make decisions about their body, their future, their identity, and their beliefs without fear of punishment, pressure, or persecution.

We don't just respect freedom—we defend it. Fiercely. Because the right to exist as yourself, to love who you love, to speak your truth, to walk through this world without being silenced, surveilled, or shamed—is sacred. No government, system, religion, or cultural norm has the right to take that from anyone.

We believe in bodily autonomy—in every sense. That means the right to decide what happens to your body, who has access to it, how it moves through the world, and what it represents. It means gender-affirming care, reproductive rights, consent, medical freedom, and the ability to say “this is who I am” without needing to justify or explain.

We believe in the freedom to believe and the freedom not to believe. To worship or not worship. To speak out or stay silent. To choose your name, your labels, your pronouns, your path. Because control over one’s life is not granted by law or earned by suffering—it is yours by default. Always has been. Always will be.

Oppression thrives where autonomy is stripped away. We’re here to make sure that never happens unchallenged again. We are not just fighting for freedom—we are living it, defending it, and building a world where it’s finally real for everyone.

Defending Constitutional Rights

The Constitution is more than paper. It is a promise. A fragile, powerful promise that—when honored—protects the dignity, freedom, and safety of every person in this country. But that promise has been broken too many times, for too many people. And so, we fight—not to romanticize the past, but to fulfill what was never fully delivered.

We are committed to upholding and defending the rights that form the foundation of a just and equitable society. Free speech. Peaceful assembly. Due process. Equal protection under the law. These are not negotiable. They are not luxuries to be offered only to the privileged or withheld in times of discomfort or dissent. They belong to all of us, or they mean nothing at all.

These rights are most sacred when they protect the most vulnerable. The accused. The protestor. The immigrant. The silenced. The targeted. The disenfranchised. Rights that only protect the powerful are not rights at all—they’re illusions. And we’re here to tear those illusions down.

We don’t believe in blind patriotism. We believe in accountable democracy. In defending the Constitution not because it is perfect, but because it is supposed to defend us—and we are here to make sure it finally does.

We will speak when they try to silence. We will assemble when they try to scatter. We will protect when they try to erase. And we will not stand by while the rights meant for all are only granted to some.

This isn't about slogans. It's about survival. And as long as we draw breath, we will hold this country to its word.

Opposition to Fascism and Authoritarianism

We do not compromise with oppression. We do not reason with fascism. We do not make space for supremacy. Our stance is clear and unapologetic: we resist authoritarianism in all its forms. Always. Everywhere.

We have seen what happens when power is left unchecked—when fear is weaponized, when history is rewritten, when people are stripped of their voices, their safety, their names. We have seen how fascism doesn't come all at once, but in whispers and policies, in scapegoats and silences, in flags waved over broken promises. We hear those whispers. We name them. And we fight them.

We stand against white nationalism. We stand against religious extremism. We stand against the police state, the surveillance state, the culture of compliance disguised as patriotism. We refuse to accept a world where people are ruled by fear, hierarchy, or violence masquerading as order.

But we don't just resist—we build. We believe in pluralism, where many voices make us stronger. We believe in participatory democracy, where people lead, not the powerful. We believe in radical inclusion, where no one is left behind because of who they are, where they come from, or how they show up in the world.

This is not political posturing. It is a moral obligation. A line we draw in the sand and refuse to erase, no matter how convenient neutrality may seem. To stay silent in the face of fascism is to enable it. To look away from authoritarianism is to surrender to it.

We're not looking away. We never will.

Non-Partisan and Inclusive

We don't serve a party. We serve people. That's the difference—and it's everything.

We aren't here to echo talking points or pledge loyalty to platforms. We're here because the work of justice, liberation, and community care doesn't fit neatly inside party lines. It never has. And it never will.

This movement is bigger than politics as usual. Bigger than elections. Bigger than who's in office and who's not. We exist because people are hurting, and no ballot box alone can heal what has been broken. We show up for one another—not for candidates, not for endorsements, not for influence—but for humanity.

We welcome anyone who is committed to the work. No matter your label. No matter your past. No matter how many times you've voted or who you've voted for. If you believe in equity, in dignity, in truth without cruelty and justice without delay—you belong here. Period.

We believe in hard conversations. We believe in unlikely coalitions. We believe that the fight for human dignity isn't left or right—it's sacred. And when the world tells us to choose sides, we choose people.

We're not building a political machine. We're building a movement. One rooted not in ideology, but in values. Not in partisanship, but in principle. Not in division, but in the belief that we are stronger when we make space for each other—especially when it's messy. Especially when it's real.

This isn't about winning a side. It's about refusing to lose ourselves.

Pro-Choice and Pro Medical Freedom

Your body is yours. Full stop. No government, no court, no employer, no institution—no one—has the right to decide what happens to it except you.

We defend bodily autonomy for all people, in every form it takes. The right to access reproductive healthcare. The right to abortion—without delay, shame, or restriction. The right to receive gender-affirming care, to transition, to be seen and treated as who you truly are. The right to refuse a procedure, to seek one, to ask questions, to say yes, to say no. The right to make decisions not out of fear, but out of freedom.

Our stance is not conditional. It is not up for debate. This isn't about politics—it's about power. And we have seen what happens when power is allowed to govern our bodies. We've seen the consequences when people are forced to carry pregnancies they didn't choose, when gender-expansive youth are denied care, when the most personal decisions are handed to strangers in suits instead of trusted doctors and loved ones.

We refuse to live in a world where anyone has to ask permission to exist.

To us, medical freedom is not a slogan—it is a life-saving reality. It is about trans kids growing up. It is about parents surviving childbirth. It is about people living with dignity in bodies they chose, not ones they were trapped in. It is about giving people agency in the most vulnerable, intimate moments of their lives.

We don't just support these rights—we protect them. Loudly. Fiercely. Publicly. Because when bodily autonomy falls, freedom falls with it. And we will not let that happen—not on our watch.

Promotion of Respect and Dialogue

We don't believe in echo chambers. We believe in each other.

Our strength isn't found in everyone agreeing—it's found in our willingness to listen, even when it's hard. Especially when it's hard. We believe in dialogue that starts from a place of dignity. We speak with empathy. We lead with listening. We make space for people to be heard, not just responded to.

Respect isn't a passive nicety—it's an active commitment. It means choosing curiosity over defensiveness. It means understanding that people carry different stories, different fears, different wounds. It means holding space for growth, not gatekeeping it. It means refusing to weaponize shame, even when we're angry. Because calling someone in is not the same as calling them out—and we know which one helps us heal.

We believe disagreement is not a threat. It's an opportunity. We won't always get it right. But we don't grow by shouting over one another or tearing each other down. We grow when we stop to ask why someone sees it that way, even if we still land somewhere different.

We are building a movement that holds complexity. That allows people to change. That honors lived experience as a form of truth. And that refuses to trade justice for cruelty.

Because the moment we stop listening to each other is the moment we lose what we're fighting for.

Solidarity with the Oppressed

We do not stand above the oppressed. We stand with them—shoulder to shoulder, voice to voice, heart to heart.

Our fight is not abstract. It's not academic. It's not hypothetical. It is rooted in the everyday, often invisible, always unjust realities of people who are pushed to the margins—by design. Systemic racism, homophobia, transphobia, xenophobia, poverty, ableism—these are not buzzwords. They are barriers. They are bruises. They are lives shortened, silenced, or stolen.

We don't look away. We don't soften our language to make the truth easier to swallow. We name what hurts. We center those who are hurting. And we follow the leadership of those who have been fighting this fight long before many of us arrived.

Solidarity is not a slogan—it's a practice. It means showing up, even when it's uncomfortable. It means listening, even when we don't know what to say. It means redistributing power, not hoarding it. It means protecting people, not just platforms. It means understanding that liberation is not linear or uniform—but it must be shared.

We reject tokenism. We reject performative allyship. We reject silence when it's safer to speak. We are not here to lift up a few—we are here to tear down the systems that keep so many down.

Because if justice isn't for all, it isn't justice. And if freedom doesn't reach the most excluded among us, then none of us are free. We rise together, or not at all.

Giving Back to Our Communities

This movement is not just about marching in the streets. It's about showing up when the cameras are off. It's about doing the work when there's no spotlight. It's about knowing that change doesn't only happen in moments of protest—it happens in the quiet, consistent acts of care that keep our communities alive.

We don't exist to replace the people who have been doing this work for years. We exist to support them, to uplift them, to fill in the gaps and carry the weight wherever we can. We believe in mutual aid, in resource-sharing, in coalition-building that puts ego aside and people first.

We commit to helping—not as saviors, but as neighbors. We collect supplies when pantries run low. We volunteer when hands are needed. We partner when the cause is greater than any one group can hold. We build relationships that last longer than any single action or event.

We do not reinvent the wheel—we reinforce it, respectfully and consistently. We know that the most revolutionary thing we can do is often the most practical: feed someone. House someone. Show up for someone. Stay when it's hard.

Giving back is not charity—it's solidarity. It's the understanding that we are only as strong as the most neglected, the most overworked, the most unseen. And if we truly want to build a better world, we start by showing up in this one—with humility, with urgency, and with open hands.

A Commitment to Justice and Equality

We are fighting for a world where justice is not delayed, not conditional, not reserved for the privileged—but accessible to everyone, as a basic and unquestionable truth. We believe in a future where equality is not aspirational, not theoretical, not selective—but normal. Expected. Real.

Justice, to us, is not an abstract concept or a political talking point. It is a promise we make to each other every day—a promise to do right, to repair harm, to level the ground that has been tilted for far too long.

We are committed to racial justice, because this country was built on stolen land and stolen labor, and we cannot move forward without reckoning with that truth.

We are committed to economic equity, because people deserve to live—not just survive.

We are committed to gender justice, because no one should have to fight to be seen, respected, or safe in their own body.

We are committed to climate justice, because the fight for the planet is the fight for our most vulnerable communities.

We are committed to disability justice and accessibility, because no movement is just if it leaves people behind.

But we don't just fight for these things in policy—we fight for them in how we organize, how we speak, how we structure our spaces and share our power. Culture is where systems begin—and that's where we begin too.

We know we won't fix everything overnight. But we are not afraid of the work. We are not afraid of the complexity. We are not afraid of doing what is right, even when it costs us something.

This is our commitment: To justice without compromise. To equality without exception. To a world where everyone gets to belong.

Affirmation of Commitment

These principles are not just words — they are obligations.

If we betray them, we betray the movement.

If we uphold them, we build a future worth fighting for.

We do not take this lightly. These commitments are sacred.

They are the bones and blood of who we are—what we defend, what we refuse to compromise, and what we demand of ourselves before we demand it of the world.

We sign our names to this not for optics, but for accountability.

Not to say we are perfect—but to say we are trying. Fully. Boldly. Together.

This is our line in the sand. This is our mirror. This is our oath.

We choose to live these principles in our organizing, our relationships, our protests, our policies, and our quiet, everyday choices.

Because what we build now must be worthy of the world we want to live in.

Signed in truth, trust, and solidarity —
We, the members and defenders of 50501.